Discussion and talk with open floor questions: Exploring the strengths and weaknesses of the Swedish Government's approach to combat hate crime against the Roma in Sweden

In 2016, the Swedish Government launched a National Plan to combat racism, which involves a pledge to counteract hate crime against religious, ethnic, sexual, and gender minorities in Sweden. Additionally, the regional police districts in Malmö, Gothenburg and Stockholm have specialized units working on hate crimes. Yet, none of the hate crimes committed with an anti-roma motive that were reported between 2016-2019 has led to an indictment. Aida Samani, Legal Adviser at Civil Rights Defenders, will explore the strengths and weaknesses of the Swedish Government's approach to combat hate crime and welcomes the participants to share their views on how it could be strengthened.

Aida Samani

Works as a Legal Adviser for Civil Rights Defenders in Stockholm, focusing on hate crime, ethnic/racial profiling, the rights of Roma EU-migrants and accountability for grave international crimes. She has an LMM from Lund University and has previous experience from the Permanent Representation of Sweden to the United Nations in New York and has worked with the Swedish Agency for Youth and Civil Society, where she was responsible for the agency's work on Roma inclusion.
