

IMPACT REPORT 2020

How does the work of Civil Rights Defenders influence the development of civil and political rights? A full overview of the Civil Rights Defenders' activities during 2020 can be found in the Annual Report. This Impact Report aims to demonstrate on a more granular level the effects and impact of some of Civil Rights Defenders' key activities during 2020, and how they deliver on our vision and mission.

Civil Rights Defenders is a member of Giva Sverige - the Swedish Fundraising Association - and follow the organisation's Impact Reporting Guidelines. Giva Sverige work to ensure that Sweden's fundraising sector is transparent, accountable, ethical, and professional.

Civil Rights Defenders is an international, non-profit, human rights organisation that is politically and religiously independent. For almost 40 years, Civil Rights Defenders has been working to defend and promote people's civil and political rights and empower human rights defenders at risk around the world. We engage in advocacy activities and legal processes, work with security and capacity building, and provide information on and create engagement for the situation concerning human rights. We are a global organisation with a presence on four continents. In 2020, Civil Rights Defenders continued its efforts to support human rights defenders in Africa, Asia, LatinAmerica, Eurasia, and Europe. With a long-term perspective, Civil Rights Defenders runs programmes and collaborates with more than 300 human rights organisations in over 50 countries. Together with the human rights defenders in our network, we jointly champion a world of democratic societies where we all enjoy fundamental rights and freedoms.

CIVIL RIGHTS DEFENDERS' VISION

A world of democratic societies in which we all enjoy our civil and political rights

CIVIL RIGHTS DEFENDERS' MISSION

Our mission is to defend civil and political rights together with local human rights defenders to increase their security, capacity, and access to justice.

We work as a part of a global movement of human rights defenders and partner with those at risk. Through legal means and public advocacy, we hold states, individuals, and non-state actors accountable for human rights violations.

We advocate for the norms and values of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other relevant human rights standards, as we encourage people to use these rights to promote democratic societies.

THEORY OF CHANGE AND OUR STRATEGY 2020

Civil Rights Defenders' Theory of Change centres on the strength of the human rights movement to alter oppressive power structures and to ensure that authorities are held accountable in respecting democracy and human rights.

Through awareness raising and organising, people are empowered to collectively challenge oppression: Awareness raising, and advocacy activities increase knowledge about rights and supports the development of critical thinking which helps individuals to start challenging oppressive practices.

Strengthening capacity and security creates organisational structures providing a platform for impactful human rights work.

With awareness and organising in place, human rights defenders are empowered to challenge oppression collectively through concerted efforts.

In 2020, Civil Rights Defenders adopted a new three-year strategy. The overall goal is to expand the space for human rights defenders by improving their security and capacity, and by increasing awareness and accountability in relation to civil and political rights.

SECURITY

Through training, emergency assistance, and innovative security solutions, Civil Rights Defenders aims to support as many human rights defenders as possible, so they can continue their important work. Together with our partner organisations, we offer training in digital, physical, as well as psychosocial security, among other areas.

CAPACITY

A strong civil society is key to sustainable democracy. We partner with local human rights organisations and provide support in skills development as well as long-term financial support based on their needs to increase their capacity to drive change.

ACCOUNTABILITY

We work to ensure respect for people's fundamental rights and freedoms and demand accountability when this is not the case. On our own, or together with local human rights defenders, we evaluate laws and proposed legislation, as well as their implementation by the authorities. We also engage in legal processes and hold those in power to account when human rights are violated.

AWARENESS

Knowing one's rights is a precondition for being able to exercise them. Through information activities, public campaigns, and advocacy, we strengthen the knowledge of and engagement for democracy and human rights in Sweden and globally.

In our Annual report, page 7-15, you can read more about our work on Security, Capacity, Accountability and Awareness in all our regions.

THE LIMITATIONS AND TIME FRAME OF THE IMPACT REPORT 2020

Civil Rights Defenders' work covers a wide range of activities, including holding states accountable through advocacy, litigation, and public campaigns; supporting partner organisations through capacity building activities and trainings; and advocacy and awareness-raising. With regards to Civil Rights Defenders large span of activities, and to be able to effectively demonstrate the correlations between resources, activities, output, outcomes and effects on a medium and long term, we have chosen to focus the Impact Report 2020 on our cross-cutting work on security, which is one of the cornerstones of our work.

We partner with and support human rights defenders who work in some of the world's most repressive regions across four continents. Human rights defenders are regularly subjected to threats, harassment, enforced disappearances, and arbitrary imprisonment at the hands of authoritarian regimes. Security is a key concern for human rights defenders in our networks and thus a fundamental priority for Civil Rights Defenders. Civil Rights Defenders' Security and Innovation Department is working systematically with several different programmes that constitute core functions within Civil Rights Defenders and aim to increase the security situation for all our partners in our global network.

The Impact Report covers three key components of our work on security: The Natalia Project, The Mobile Training Centre, and the Emergency Fund.

This Impact Report follows Giva Sverige's new and improved guidelines for impact reporting. The report covers activities during 2020. To get a comprehensive overview of all Civil Rights Defender's activities during 2020, please see our Annual Report for 2020, page 4-29.

WHY IS CIVIL RIGHTS DEFENDERS' WORK ON SECURITY NEEDED?

In 2018, we celebrated the 70th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. These rights are being challenged at an increasing rate, both in Europe and even more so globally. At the same time, democracy is eroding in countries previously regarded as free and open.

2020 was an extraordinary year. In the aftermath of the COVID-19 pandemic, we watched previously unthinkable restrictions on people's social, political, and economic activity rapidly become a reality for billions across the world. While many of the restrictions were crucial for combatting the spread of COVID-19, the pandemic brought the opportunity for autocrats and dictators to strengthen their grip on power by attacking civil rights and seizing institutions while cracking down on dissidents, women, and vulnerable groups, such as ethnic minorities and the LGBTI+ community.

All states need thriving civil societies, but when populations are deprived of influence, critical voices fade. The pattern is not new, in many cases, repressive regimes are increasingly using brutal methods to quell human rights defenders' fight for the civil and political rights that belong to us all. Whether by banning individual organisations, imprisoning representatives, destroying assembly halls and offices, or persecuting sympathisers, the repression against human rights stops at nothing.

Many of our partners live and operate in some of the most oppressive countries in the world, others in countries showing clear signs of democratic backsliding. Although living and working in regions and countries with vast differences, they are all affected by the current wave of autocratisation and shrinking civic space. They face similar patterns of oppression and work under increasingly difficult conditions. Being a human rights defender has become increasingly dangerous. Many on the frontlines are daily exposed to risks and threats, putting their lives and safety in danger. Persecution, surveillance, harassment, arbitrary arrests, interrogation by the security services, torture, and disappearances – the list of the risks faced by human rights defenders in their work goes on. Living and working in a hostile environment often takes its toll, on both the physical and the mental health of the individual. Civil Rights Defenders therefore work to increase the security of human rights defenders through several programmes run by our Security and Innovation Department.

CIVIL RIGHTS DEFENDERS AND OUR RESOURCE

Organisation

Civil Rights Defenders has an independent, non-profit board of nationally and internationally recognised human rights experts. The members of the board are elected during the Annual Meeting, which is the organisation's supreme decision-making body. The organisation has a secretariat led by the Executive Director, whose task it is to implement the decisions of the board and to handle the day-to-day operation of the organisation.

By the end of 2020, Civil Rights Defenders had 75 staff members at the organisation's head office in Stockholm, at our regional offices or stationings in Asia, Africa, Belgrade, Bogotá, Brussels, Istanbul, Pristina, Sarajevo, and Tirana.

Country programmes are managed and coordinated by five regional departments: Africa, Asia, Eurasia, Europe, and Latin America. The organisation has two thematic departments: Security and Innovation and the Legal Department, in addition to departments for Communications, Fundraising and Partnerships, and Finance.

The Security and innovation Department, at the centre of this Impact Report, is a team of ten people, specialised in safety, security, and innovative methods to support human rights defenders most at risk. The team is also responsible for organisational security and IT management, neatly connecting the internal expertise with the external work of Civil Rights Defenders.

In addition to our internal expertise on security, we often collaborate with consultants and trainers with special expertise in the field, who speak the same language and share the same culture as the participants. This to better reach the human rights defenders with the most need for support.

Partners

We cooperate with more than 300 human rights organisations across East and Horn of Africa, Europe, Eurasia, Latin America, Southeast Asia, and Sweden. We believe that local forces are best placed to be driving human rights work due to their permanent presence and closeness to those whose rights are violated.

Our Security and Innovation Department work closely with Civil Rights Defenders' partners, but also beyond the already established partner networks of the organisation.

Funding

The world is increasingly putting great demand on us to act quickly and provide flexible support when emergencies arise, or the security situation deteriorates for those standing up for human rights.

Civil Rights Defenders is a registered Swedish non-profit organisation with no religious and political affiliation. Our work is financed by governmental organisations and private funders, including foundations, corporate partnerships, and contributions from the general public. The support is essential to ensure our flexibility and ability to act quickly and to target actions where the need is greatest.

Public Grants

The most important grant-awarding bodies are the Swedish International Development Cooperation Agency, Sida, and the Swedish Ministry of Foreign Affairs followed by Swedish Inheritance Fund and the Swedish Agency for Youth and Civil Society. Grants from stateactors are important for maintaining long-term engagement, in Sweden and the world.

Foundations and Organisations

Private foundations are becoming an increasingly important source of funding for the organisation. In 2020, the most extensive contributions came from the National Endowment for Democracy, Open Society Foundation, Civicus, and the Gerald and Monica Nagler Foundation.

Funds Raised from the General Public

The number of both sporadic private donors and monthly donors is increasing, and at the end of the year, the organisation had roughly 1,800 monthly donors. Monthly donations allow for long-term planning and stability and reduce administration costs.

Companies

Companies contributed to Civil Rights Defenders, either through long-term partnerships, or by giving a one-off donation. We are since 2013 a beneficiary of the Swedish Postcode Lottery and receive an annual distribution. In 2020, we entered into a long-term partnership with Tele2. Other important partners that supported our operations included, among others, the Swedish Football Association, the Swedish Olympic and Paralympic Committees, and Twitter. Several new corporate donors made contributions in connection with the 2020 end-of-year campaign.

INCOME

Total income incl. interest income and similar profit items for 2020: SEK 101,771 thousand (2019: SEK 89,042 thousand).

The distribution of income is shown below:

- Public bodies – 56% (65%)
- Foundations and organisations – 24% (8%)
- The general public – 5% (6%)
- Companies – 14% (21%)

The outer circle shows the distribution of income for 2020 and the inner circle for 2019.

NATALIA PROJECT, THE EMERGENCY FUND AND THE MOBILE TRAINING CENTRE IN 2020

In 2011, Civil Rights Defenders established its Security and Innovations Department (formerly known as Human Rights Defenders at Risk Department) as part of systematising and focusing Civil Rights Defenders efforts within safety and security. The department upholds several key components of the organisations' global work, such as the unique alarm system the Natalia Project (since 2013) the systematic security training programmes within the Mobile Training Centre (since 2011), the flexible, rapid response granting initiative the Emergency Fund (established in 2013).

The Natalia Project

The Natalia Project is the world's first security alarm system for human rights defenders at risk. The GPS based alarm system was born out of the conclusion that many attacks against human rights defenders occurred without colleagues and international networks knowing about it until several hours or even days after. By which it might be too late to try to influence the events.

When human rights defenders are included in the Natalia Project, they are equipped with an alarm device and undergo comprehensive training in security planning and emergency response. When in immediate danger, they can trigger the alarm and thereby send an alarm signal to their organisation and/or trusted contacts and to Civil Rights Defenders' headquarters in Stockholm. The alarm signal indicates the position of the human rights defender and will continue sending updated positions until the alarm is turned off. When the organisation receives the alarm signal, it can initiate actions and mobilise search and support according to the security plan. When Civil Rights Defenders receive the alarm signal, we can engage thousands of people over social media and e-mail within a very short period of time.

Since the launch, the Natalia Project has grown steadily. 2020 has been a difficult year, particularly for the training of new human rights defenders joining the project. Despite this, we were able to include another 15 individuals during the year. In total, this means that over 200 human rights defenders have now been a part of the Natalia Project over the past 8 years from Russia, Central Asia, Africa, Southeast Asia, Latin America, and Western Balkans. Like last year, countries that host most participants are Russia, Kenya, and Venezuela - each with more than 20 participants - closely followed by South Sudan, Belarus, and Somalia. Among the most common countries are also countries that are too sensitive to mention publicly – indicating that many of the Natalia Project participants are under threats so severe that their security depends on them being anonymous.

The Mobile Training Centre

To meet the growing need for better safety and security for human rights defenders at risk, our Mobile Training Centre provides them skills and knowledge necessary to protect themselves, their organisations, and their work from immediate and long-term danger. Civil Rights Defenders conduct trainings in organisational, psychosocial, physical, and digital security. We also provide stress management training and other types of needs- based support.

The Mobile Training Centre also performs security audits and research to strengthen the ability of human rights defenders to face risk in connection to their work. As part of the longer-term engagement, the component also provides ongoing security related mentoring and support to Civil Rights Defenders’ partners to ensure a close and strong collaboration when situations get difficult. Throughout 2020, the pandemic brought several challenges to our work with the Mobile Training Centre. By conducting training remotely and in collaboration with local partners, we nevertheless successfully carried out 14 training sessions during the year for 186 human rights defenders, of which 97 were women and 89 were men.

Emergency Fund

Promoting and protecting civil and political rights has never been free of risk. Under the pretense of national security, public order, or morals, repressive regimes may intensify their efforts to silence those who dare challenge their power.

The past year has been challenging in many ways. The global pandemic led more countries to introduce emergency laws, which in turn opened up for human rights violations. On the frontline, many of the brave people demanding change are subjected to threats and harassment on a daily basis.

If the situation deteriorates for a human right defender at risk, and in the event of a security crisis, being able to react quickly can mark the difference between life and death. This is the purpose of the Civil Rights Defenders’ Emergency Fund – to provide rapid assistance to human rights defenders at risk.

In 2020, more than 730 human rights defenders including family members have received support through the Emergency Fund. Grants were distributed to defenders in 34 countries, including Cambodia, Kenya, Armenia, Brazil, Venezuela, Uganda, and Ukraine, in form of legal aid, security assistance, relocation to safe housing, or help to leave the country when threats become too serious. 98 per cent of those who received support from the Emergency Fund in 2020 have been able to continue their crucial work after receiving support.

Working with emergency support during a pandemic

The Emergency Fund is designed to be able to grant both proactive security measures and emergency interventions. We know from experience that if support is granted before the situation escalates, the risks that a human rights defender will suffer from stress and burnout decrease.

The support we provide can, for example, be to cover legal fees after arrests, support to seek international protection or to increase security with measures such as assault alarms, security training, psychosocial support, or increased office security. In 2020, despite the global pandemic and the travel restrictions that followed, temporary relocations continued to be one of the most requested types of support. The primary goal of this is to quickly de-escalate a situation and move a human rights defender out of immediate danger until it is safe for them to resume their work.

WHAT DIFFERENCE DOES CIVIL RIGHTS DEFENDERS' WORK ON SECURITY MAKE?

By training human rights defenders and providing security support through the Natalia Project, the Mobile Training Centre and The Emergency Fund, Civil Rights Defenders aim to empower human rights defenders in their continuous work and strive to strengthen resilient civil societies around the world.

Natalia Project

Human rights defenders at risk all over the world use the Natalia Project alarm devices. The alarms have for example been used when human rights defenders have been physically hurt in the border region between Venezuela and Colombia, arrested in North Caucasus, or detained during protests in Belarus. But even more important, it is a tool to provide a feeling of safety for the bearer and to prevent attacks. A good result is thus when the distress signal is not used. The alarm puts pressure on repressive governments that an attack against a human rights defender will not pass unnoticed.

Abdifatah Hassan Ali is a Somali Blogger and Social Media Activist, and has been part of the Natalia Project since 2018:

"I work in Somalia and I have received many threats. One of the most helpful things for me is that the Natalia Project has helped us to develop security plans. Our organisation did not have this before, and we feel a lot more confident now that we do. We trust that if something happens, somebody out there will do something for us.... Before I started using the device, no one knew where I was or what I was doing. I could not contact my friends or family if something were to happen. I now carry the alarm on a daily basis and it has made me feel a lot more confident,"

Emergency Fund

With the Emergency Fund, Civil Rights Defenders aim to protect human rights defenders from both immediate danger and long-term risks associated with their work and enable them to continue their important efforts to hold power accountable. Our support focuses on resilience and sustainability of human rights defenders. Also, in urgent situations our ambition is to make sure that human rights defenders can continue with their human rights struggles even in the most pressing circumstances. Responding to urgent threats to human rights defenders, the Emergency Fund provides a rapid response through flexible grants and relocation support.

Yuly Paola Artunduaga works for the human rights organisation MEROS in Colombia. Last year, she was one of the 730 human rights defenders who received support from the Emergency Fund. She fights for women's rights, especially in rural areas in the Colombian Andean Amazon region, and for what was promised in the 2016 Peace Agreement to become a reality. Last year, several of Paola's colleagues disappeared or were murdered. Several death threats were made against her family and other colleagues. Due to the acute danger, Paola and her family had to be moved quickly to a safe place. Colombia is the deadliest country in the world for human rights defenders. Of the more than 330 human rights defenders murdered around the world last year, 169 came from Colombia and most of them from the Colombian Amazon.

“To suddenly be forced to flee, and leave everything you have, makes you mentally broken. But thanks to the support of Civil Rights Defenders, I was able to continue my work from a new location without having to worry about my family’s safety”, says Paola.

North Macedonian LGBTI+ activist Bekim Asani, is another human rights defender receiving support from the Emergency Fund. Last year, Bekim Asani himself was attacked near his office. His eye was damaged in the attack, and he ended up in the hospital. This is when he decided to apply for the Emergency Fund. Bekim Asani and a family member were temporarily relocated to a safe space where he could heal and gather strength to continue his activism.

“After a few months, I am calmer, and I feel safer. I feel empowered. And now, I have continued my activism. I have continued to fight for LGBT rights,” said Bekim Asani. “I am so thankful that we have a shoulder that we can rely on when our lives and the lives of our close ones are in danger”, says Bekim Asani.

Mobile Training Centre

When assessing the risks faced by human rights defenders in repressive countries, the fear and stress inherent to the environment are always one of the main dangers we identify. It is costly for organisations in terms of staff turnover and loss of capacity, and also extremely draining on a personal level, leading to health issues, such as burnout.

Teaching human rights defenders, the skills to handle threatening situations takes some of the pressure off. Knowing that they can handle an interrogation without breaking down reduces the fear they live with day to day. In the same vein, helping organisations develop methods on how to prevent staff burnout and trauma ensures their capacity to keep working through tough times.

An anonymous human rights defender participating in an interrogation readiness training in South East Asia:

“This is a real-life situation that we frequently find ourselves in. The techniques both in the personal and the organisational level were very helpful. It is very handy to have a tool to automatically tune into and de-escalate stressed colleagues. We do go under very stressful conditions and now we are equipped to handle them more adequately.”

Participant from a workshop in South-East Asia, on information security: “I will ask for training materials to extend this training to all my staff and all the community members working with us. I am coordinating 29 NGOs working in the region and I realize that even though they work under very difficult human rights situations, there is no such training for these NGOs.”

“I love the feeling of a safe space this training included. I got to meet so many people in the breakout room, being able to talk about my situation without feeling judged and to see that many others are experience the same situation. I even started to cry at the last exercise because I felt relieved”

WHAT ARE THE LONG-TERM EFFECTS OF THE ACTIVITIES?

Civil Rights Defenders’ Theory of Change centres on the strength of the human rights movement to alter oppressive power structures and to ensure that authorities are held accountable in respecting democracy and human rights.

All departments at Civil Rights Defenders work in close contact with partners to strengthen their ability to represent and act in close consultation with their local communities. Our partners are often identified as actors with a strong potential to influence the human rights situation in the context where they act.

But despite having the potential to be strong voice bearers in the local communities, our partners often lack the resources or the capacity to organise effectively, thus their potential positive impact is easily lost. Further, as Civil Rights Defenders often support organisations, networks or individuals who oppose authoritarian regimes and dictatorship – they are up against strong forces who would rather see them silenced. These opponents often possess both legal means and crude force by being in control of both state- and non-state actors who can be mobilised to target our partners. When repressive legislation with broad and sweeping laws are not enough to deter or arrest human rights defenders on false grounds, human rights defenders might simply disappear, never to be heard from again.

To enable crucial voice bearers to continue to act as representatives of their local communities, they often initially need basic support in both security and capacity. Through security trainings on, for example, interrogation situations or digital security clinics, and participation in Civil Rights Defenders projects such as the Natalia Project, human rights actors are supported to continue their work under the most pressing circumstances. First, when security is at least at a basic level, organisations or networks can work for increased awareness and engagement for democracy and human rights for people in their communities.

WHEN CAN WE EXPECT TO SEE CHANGE?

Civil Rights Defenders work together with partners in some of the most repressive countries in the world - states characterised by a lack of respect for human rights and real democratic governance. Actively promoting human rights work is associated with risks and persecution. The work can sometimes seem hopeless. Initiatives to promote human rights and democracy, and accountability from those in power, is often taken by small steps at a time, and may sometimes not have long-lasting effects. In many cases, a status quo or a non-worsening situation may be positive results. But through history, there are positive examples. Civil Rights Defenders mission is to support our partners and work alongside with them to achieve change, and we firmly believe that our vision is possible: A world of democratic societies in which we all enjoy our civil and political rights.

THE COSTS OF CIVIL RIGHTS DEFENDERS' OPERATIONS

Civil Rights Defenders total operation costs for 2020 was SEK 98,506,243. The total operating expenses include project expenses (SEK 87,538,378), fundraising expenses (SEK 4,932,472), and administrative expenses (SEK 5,979,956). Project expenses are those that are directly associated with the fulfilment of Civil Rights Defenders' purpose according to its statutes, including expenses for personnel engaged to carry out activities, expenses for opinion-shaping and information activities regarding Civil Rights Defenders' mission. The monitoring, reporting, and auditing of projects are also classified as project expenses.

Fundraising expenses are expenses intended to generate external income in the form of donations and grants from all donors and grant-awarding bodies, i.e. both private individuals and companies.

Administrative expenses are those required to manage and run the organisation i.e. expenses not related to projects or fundraising are classified as administrative expenses.

Examples of such expenses relate to board meetings, accounting and annual reports, the handling of payroll and social security contributions, VAT and tax declarations, audits of the organisation itself, as well as administrative systems such as accounting systems.

The activities mentioned in the Impact Report for 2020; The Natalia Project, the Mobile Training Centre and the Emergency Fund are mostly supported through funds from the Swedish International Development Cooperation Agency, Sida, and the Swedish Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Resources used for the training activities during 2020 were approximately SEK 1,200,000, including both the Natalia Project and the Mobile Training Centre. The Emergency Fund did during 2020 transfer approximately SEK 3,700, 000, which is an increase with over SEK 1,050,000 compared to 2019. The activities have been performed by a team of ten programme officers with different specialities within security support, overseen by the Director for the Security and Innovation Department. During 2020 some resources have been moved from the Mobile Training Centre to the Emergency Fund to mitigate urgent needs related to the Covid-19 pandemic.

LESSONS LEARNED AND HOW CIVIL RIGHTS DEFENDERS MEASURE ACTIVITIES AND OUTCOMES

The training modalities developed by Civil Rights Defenders are all focused to increase organisational capacity to ensure security both for trained human rights defenders and their colleagues in respective organisation or community. This is done to make sure invested resources – both financial and human - are used as responsively as possible.

Through-out theyears, the Mobile Training Centre has developed successful methods for “training of trainers”. This refers to the ability to transfer knowledge to training participants that in turn can be transferred to other relevant staff without further intervention from Civil Rights Defenders. The team working with the Mobile Training Centre has complemented this practice with a mentorship function at the offices at Civil Rights Defenders, being ready to support local partners when additional assistance is needed. The Natalia Project is run according to a similar methodology - with intense trainings focusing on a small group of human rights defenders but involving their extended network to guarantee sustainability and resource efficiency.

As part of the Emergency Fund granting mechanism, Civil Rights Defenders always performs a long-term security assessment to ensure that the support provided to human rights defenders most at risk adds to sustainability and continuation of the beneficiary's engagement in human rights work.

The Natalia Project and the Mobile Training Centre are measured to ensure that the Civil Rights Defenders training methodology does not add to one-off trainings or "symbolic" trainings. We therefore measure both qualitative insights such as participation – gender disaggregated to ensure diversity within the groups – and quantitative insights such as learnings.

During 2020 the Covid-19 pandemic has been the major challenge for the operations of Civil Rights Defenders. Many of the different modalities through which we work have been modified to stay efficient in the new reality the world has been facing. Among those are the Mobile Training Centre and the Emergency Fund.

The Mobile Training Centre has by tradition been based on in-house trainings located locally in close collaboration with on the ground human rights defenders. During 2020, Civil Rights Defenders quickly redesigned the trainings to be adapted as a functional remote training facility. Based on the learning that not all transitions from physical to remote events have been successful.

To fulfil the need of on-site meetings, the Mobile Training Centre also worked intensively with identifying relevant local trainers. These mainly came from networks that have already received security training from Civil Rights Defenders. They were remotely mentored by Civil Rights Defenders security experts, in order to be able to provide relevant training to local peers and networks.

Through these two adaptations of the Mobile Training Centre, Civil Rights Defenders were able to provide trainings to a high number of human rights defenders. This was mainly done within the field of digital security, psychosocial support and information security.

The Emergency Fund has seen a radical shift, and also increase of applications, during 2020. The increased influx of application can be easily related to more difficult and unpredictable times for many human rights defenders. As the Covid-19 pandemic has spread, many governments have increased their repression leading to a more challenging situation for many human rights defenders.

Notably there has been an increase in applications for relocation to safe spaces, where the Emergency Fund previous years have seen more applications concerning security improvements of offices. Also, there has been a high number of applications covering basic needs of human rights defenders – most likely because of the overall challenges during the pandemic. The Civil Rights Defenders Emergency Fund has focused to keep human rights defenders safe and functional, providing resources enabling them to find shelters and continuing their work.
